An ATARA FILM production

When talking about cameras in a wildlife film you have many questions. Will I have enough time for the set-up? Will I be able to get the camera to the place where I need it? Are there enough people looking after the technical side making sure the image section is correct? Despite difficult conditions these questions have no impact on the footage of the award winner. The way the subject matter was filmed creates emotional responses of the audience and conveys a unique atmosphere. Through selective use of music and calm the film conveys an impression of magic silence and the filmmaker's observations throughout the production. The production has a wonderful varied and relevant narration complementing music, image and editing of this atmospheric film. It invites the audience to contemplate and reflect.
