Featuring unique insights into nature and great aerial photography, the film familiarizes the audience with the problems caused by the exploitation of the salmon's natural habitat. Without a commentary but with original sounds and music, this film stands out mediating between nature suffering from the exploitation of the salmon and humans who would not be able to survive without it. The only hope is that children of the region will recognize the importance of the salmon for nature and humans and counteract its exploitation. The award for Best Independent Production goes to HePka – Sockeye Salmon, Red Fish.
