Never before has Green Screen received so many and such impressive entries on the subject of climate change. Yet very rarely, such a grim prognosis on the matter has been told so vividly with such strong images.

This film manages to provide worldwide research on complicated facts, unemotional commentaries and original graphic tricks that motivate the audience and leave lasting impressions.

When Antarctic, Arctic and all glaciers melt, the ocean level rises by 66 meters. If we do not react fast, we will reach the point of no return much faster than ever imagined. Nobody will be able to stop the floods.

This report is a real eye-opener.

The Special Jury Award goes to “66 Meters”
