With clever imagery and impressive camera perspectives underwater, from the air and on the surface, this film accompanies marine animals. The story tells of intelligent cooperation, sophisticated hunting techniques and complex behaviors that give us insights far beyond everyday survival.

Combining excellent dramaturgy and scripting, the director keeps his viewers spellbound in a work that is suspenseful throughout. The film shines with a profound fascination for whales and dolphins - sea creatures hidden from most humans, yet more than ever dependent on our protection to survive.

The "Best Marine Film" award goes to "Ocean Super Predators" by directors Jérôme Julienne and John Jackson and writer Eleanor Grant, commissioned for Smithsonian Channel.
