Very rarely filmmakers manage to produce such an atmospheric work of art.

The masterly interaction of the individual components of the film – imagery, confident post-production, absorbing narrative style – creates a cinematic symphony. Under the direction of nature itself yet another dramatic cycle of growth and decay begins.

The filmmakers succeed in uncovering a deeply hidden layer: When beetles wage wars, plants send out warnings and mushrooms come to live after having died, then the feat of elegantly combining poetry and acquisition of knowledge has been accomplished. “Making an Ancient Forest” is a success story.
