This film achieves the very remarkable feat of raising its audience's awareness of relationships within nature thus heightening their perception of nature conservation.

The filmmakers portrait their animal protagonists very convincingly and make it easy to develop an enduring appreciation of their small and large creatures.

Being moved to tears by the death of a mosquito is a sign that the poignant imagery chosen by the filmmakers has made its mark. When the dreariest grey weather appears in the most beautiful light and ghostlike will-o'-the-wisp glows in the night then the 'Bavarian Sea' is shown from a surprising new angle.
